Whaling Masters is one of the publications written by members of the Federal Writers' Project of the Works Progress Administration. Designed primarily to give useful employment to needy unemployed writers and research workers, this project has utilized their experience and abilities in the preparation for the American people of a portrait of America--its history, folklore, scenery, cultural backgrounds, social and economic trends, and racial factors.

Many books and brochures are being written for the American Guide Series. As they appear in increasing numbers we hope the public will come to appreciate more fully not only the unusual scope of this undertaking, but also the devotion shown by the workers--from the humblest field worker to the most accomplished editor engaged in the final critical revision of the manuscript. The Federal Writers' Project, directed by Henry G. Alsberg, is administered by Ellen S. Woodward, Assistant Administrator.

FOREWORD

From early days until less than seventy years ago, almost every family in the coastal cities and towns of Massachusetts included at least one member who depended in some way on the sea for his livelihood. But of all those who went down to the sea in ships, none was invested with so much glamour, and none endured so much hardship and tragedy as the whaling captains and their crews who sailed out of New Bedford, Nantucket, New London, and the Cape Cod ports.

The history of the whaling industry, which until comparatively recent years supplied illumination for the homes of the country and lubrication for its machines, is replete with adventure. The most vivid chapters of imaginative fiction scarcely equal in drama the literal facts of the relentless whale chase. From pole to pole, in temperate zones and at the equator, men sought the huge sea mammals for their valuable oil and bone and precious ambergris.

Most of the men who played leading roles in the whaling dramas of the sea are gone, but the memory of their exploits is cherished by succeeding generations whose lives are less adventurous. To those of the present age whose great-grandfathers and great-uncles, grandfathers and uncles commanded whaling ships out of various American ports, this book is dedicated.

The Writers' Project, with the generous cooperation of the Old Dartmouth Historical Society, has essayed to present in few words an outline of the history of whaling and an explanation of its daring technique. These serve merely as a background sketch for the comprehensive list of whaling masters that follows — a list as complete as painstaking search of the local records can make it; a roll of honor for an industry whose men were strong of hand and staunch of heart.

LOG OF THE WHALER

The history of American whaling may be roughly divided into three periods — the first, drift whaling and inshore whaling; later, sperm whaling; and at the last, Arctic whaling.

The Indians had practiced whale fishing before the Pilgrims arrived. They attacked their prey from canoes, with the crudest of weapons. The native spears were seldom capable of more than wounding the whale. Whenever possible it was the policy of the Red Men to drive the whales into shallow water where they could be handled with less peril to the hunters.

John Smith, returning to England from the Virginia settlement in 1614, wrote of the large number of whales he had seen in the waters of the New World and predicted their commercial possibilities. The first recorded attempt by white men to slay a whale took place six years later, while the Mayflower was anchored in what was to be called Provincetown harbor.

A number of whales "of greate size" were feeding and disporting in the vicinity of the famous shallop. One venturesome member of the school came to the surface close to the side of the ship. A fowling piece was loaded with a super-charge, aimed and fired. But those on board the Mayflower came nearer to catastrophe than the whale, for the extra charge was too much for the weapon and it exploded. The whale sounded, and a survey of the Mayflower crew and passengers established that there were no casualties.

Whale fishing was carried on in a small way by the early settlers along Cape Cod. The colonists accomplished without need of instruction the stripping and trying out of drift whales cast on the beaches, but when it came to going out to sea and combating the larger whales in their natural element, the Whites had to study the methods of the Red Men. They were not long in improving on these. They fashioned iron harpoons and lances and built sturdier boats than the Indians' light craft.

The place does not figure prominently in the whaling activity of succeeding years, but the first organized whale fishery was established at Southampton, Long Island, in March 1644. Here drift whales caught in shoal water were driven inshore by groups of fishermen, killed and stripped, and the blubber tried.

Closely following the example set at Southampton and Easthampton, Long Island, other settlements took up shore whaling and it became an industry of importance. Early settlers who had moved from the Plymouth colony to Eastham, on Cape Cod, found in the drift whales a source of income sufficient to pay their taxes and support their churches and themselves. The shelving shores of the sand spit that reaches out into the Atlantic —"the bare and bended arm of Cape Cod," as Thoreau called it— constitute a natural trap for grampus or blackfish, a small species of whale. Even today blackfish are frequently stranded on the beaches from North Truro to South Wellfleet when their avid pursuit of schools of small fish lands them unawares in shoal water. Today the decease ashore of a school of blackfish, each about 20 feet long and weighing from one to two tons, is a distinct embarrassment to the Town Fathers, but in the early days it was a welcome event.

The various towns maintained lookouts whose duty it was to report the approach of a school of whales. If the school were not already stranded, every able-bodied man and boy rushed to the small boats and in them attempted to drive the unwary feeding creatures onto the beach. There they were branded for ownership with the slash of a knife, and later were cut up and the blubber tried out in large kettles hung over woodfires along the shore.

Although records show that Nantucket fishermen began to take drift and inshore whales before 1681, there is no indication of any really concerted whale fishing as an independent industry until about 1740. Prior to this the townspeople had divided their time in whaling, farming, and cod fishing, and other pursuits. In the middle 18th century the little island emerged as a port with a future.

Previously an attempt had been made to acquire an expert harpooner from Southampton, but, unable to entice one from such a distance, a committee journeyed down Cape Cod, to Yarmouth or more probably Truro, and made a proposition to one Ichabod Paddock, a famous whaleman, to "learne them in the ways of killing whales." Ichabod was favorably impressed with the terms offered, and it was a bargain.

The year 1712 is an important one in whaling annals, for then a storm changed the course of the infant industry. A Nantucket whaler, blown off shore in a terrific gale, came upon a school of sperm whales. One of them was fastened to, and taken. As was customary at this time, the ship returned to port as soon as it had made the kill and the trying-out was done on shore. The sperm whale proved infinitely more profitable than the smaller species with which the Islanders were familiar in their shore-whaling. Its oil, being a far better illuminant than that of the smaller whales, brought a bigger price. Its spermaceti made better candles.

Although whaling was still only a secondary, unorganized industry in Nantucket long after 1712, many small ships were sporadically engaged in it. A large fleet of 30-ton sloops and small schooners was still intermittently coasting, fishing and whaling, yet the total volume of oil shipped from there before whaling developed into an actual independent industry had for many years given Nantucket recognition as the country's leading whaling port.

Several factors contributed to its loss of that position, among them the isolation of the island. During the wars of 1776 and 1812, Nantucket ships were easy prey for British men-of-war, and although the town made a valiant effort to recoup its losses after both these conflicts, it gradually yielded place to New Bedford.

Meanwhile, newer methods of whaling, in which Nantucket was greatly handicapped, were also threatening its leadership. A Nantucketer had conceived the idea of fitting whale ships with try works aboard so that they could remain at sea for months or even a year or two, and in 1761 the first whaler equipped for a long voyage, put to sea. It was this innovation that finally lost Nantucket its rank as the outstanding whaling port, for as whaling technique and equipment improved, larger and larger vessels were required to bring home profitable cargoes. A sand bar in Nantucket harbor could be cleared at high tide by small craft, but when progress created vessels of 300 tons, this sand spit became a barrier that prevented loaded ships of this size from entering or leaving the harbor.

For many years Nantucketers met the problem as best they could by loading and unloading their whalers outside the harbor. Several efforts were made to obtain Federal assistance to eliminate the sand bar. In 1803 a Federal survey was made. In February 1828 the Massachusetts General Court recommended to Congress that an appropriation be made for a breakwater outside the bar. The bill did not pass the United States Senate.

Another device of Nantucket ingenuity for a time overcame this natural obstacle. A huge floating dry dock or "camel," drawing only a few feet of water, was built. Large vessels were lightened and warped into this as into any dry dock. Then the water was pumped from the "camel" so the whaler could be floated out across the bar to deep water. Of course, the same procedure had to be followed in reverse on the return. For seven years — from 1842 to 1849 — Nantucket sought to retain its whaling industry by this method, and indeed reference has been made to 1842 as "Nantucket's most abundant year." In 1846 a cataclysmic disaster came upon the island. A fire that spread to the harbor destroyed the greater part of its shipping, with a loss running into hundreds of thousands of dollars of invested capital.

New Bedford had the natural advantage of a deep and commodious harbor with an easy entrance. Then, too, ships fitted for a year's voyage required tremendous stores of supplies, and these were more easily obtained on the mainland than on the island. After 1815 New Bedford began to challenge Nantucket's supremacy in the industry, the beginning of a long rivalry.

The combing of tropical waters for sperm whales by a growing fleet of whale ships from New Bedford, Nantucket, Sag Harbor, Fairhaven, New London, and other coastal towns soon scattered the schools of cachalot, and made them more difficult to capture. This scarcity of sperm whales resulted in the third and last phase of whale hunting. The whalemen were driven on into the dark and then unknown sections of the Arctic in search of "right" and "bowhead" whales.

Although the oil of these two varieties brought usually only one-half as much as that of the sperm whale, the valuable bone in their mammoth jaws was utilized commercially in a great many ways, chiefly as "stays" in the cumbersome corsets in which women of that day encased themselves.

In general, pursuit of the bowhead and right whales was carried on in the same manner as that of the sperm. These two species were less aggressive and lacked the vicious toothlined jaw of the sperm whale which was always a menace. But when aroused or in the "flurry," as the death-agony was called, they possessed even more damaging flukes than the sperm. And when a boat was smashed in the icy waters near the poles, the exposure was often fatal to all members of the crew, even if they did not drown.

Whaling in the Arctic — for this of the two polar zones proved the more profitable ground — introduced a new method toward its close. Steam-propelled whalers were found more practicable, in that they could take advantage of narrow openings in the ice regardless of wind direction. Even these, however, were frequently caught in the ice and destroyed.

If any one style of vessel may be called a typical whaling craft, old-timers would probably select the bark, a vessel with fore and main masts square-rigged and mizzen mast fore-and-aft rigged. Fewer men were required to sail a bark, for the fore-and-aft rig was handled from the deck without the necessity of sending men up into the yards, and it was therefore more economical to operate. During the peak of whaling operations barks were more numerous than other types of whale ships and for that reason are recognized as the typical whaling vessel.

The old whaling masters, nevertheless, had decidedly individual ideas as to the best type of vessel and gear. Early whale fishing utilized 30-foot sloops almost exclusively, and in later years full-rigged ships, brigs, brigantines, and even schooners and hermaphrodite brigs had their adherents. Some of the more recent Atlantic whalemen went back to schooners for their shorter voyages.

Most of the larger vessels carried five whaleboats swinging from their davits. The captain and each of his four officers had command of the small boats and their crews of five each. Six men usually were left aboard ship as keepers on occasions when all five boats were out at one time on the chase. An average crew on a five-boat whaler consisted of 35 or 40 men, including officers.

Each ship's crew included boatsteerers, a cooper, a ship's carpenter, steward, cook, and cabin boy. Some vessels carried a blacksmith, although the cooper often performed a blacksmith's duties.

Much has been written of the cruelty of some whaling masters and officers. Some of it is unquestionably true. But when the character of the average crew of green hands is considered, severe methods of discipline are at least understandable. Criminals sought for the most heinous of crimes ashore realized that by signing up for a voyage of from two to five years they had a good opportunity of escaping justice.

Bloody mutinies early taught whaling masters and officers that the safety of their ships and their own lives depended on a thorough mastering of the crew and the cowing of lawless elements. Most old-time masters held to the theory that idleness on long voyages tended to foster the germs of mutiny. During the early part of the voyage, days of calm saw the various boat crews being drilled for hours and hours at a stretch until back and shoulder muscles were almost as supple and strong as steel bands.

The very lives of the men depended upon precise maneuvering in its highest degree. An instance in point is the kill. After the boatsteerer had made fast with the harpoon, the boat was hauled close to the whale — so close in fact it often chafed against its very side while the mate poised his lance above it.

The instant that lance struck home all hell broke loose. The snapping jaws and flaying flukes slashed at anything and everything within reach. At such moments five oarsmen had either to act with the precision and speed of a powerful motor or suffer the consequences.

And after the boat crews were drilled to required perfection there were still duties enough to make spare time almost negligible. Breakfast at 5 o'clock was followed by swabbing decks, then making sail and tightening rigging. Then there were bales of oakum and sennet to be braided into buffers or fenders for both the mother ship and the small boats, to be used to prevent chafing of the sides or prow or of the wooden equipment. Harpoons and lances had to be kept razor-edged, lines overhauled and weak spots spliced. The cooper and ship's carpenter continually needed men not on watch to assist in coopering and repairing boats. At 4 o'clock p. m. decks were swept and scrubbed again. Supper was at 5 o'clock and between that hour and 7 p. m. the whaleman had two hours of "loafing" time — when he wasn't engaged in chasing whales or cutting-in and trying out.

The sailor on a whaleship utilized this spare time in "scrimshawing". While some authorities contend that scrimshaw was confined to the art of etching on whales' teeth, others apply the term to the broader and more varied practice covering any knickknack the sailor might make.

Many of the early whaling masters were of the Quaker faith and therefore opposed to cards, checkers, and other "frivolous pursuits" in loafing hours. As a result many of the scrimshaw exhibits of the earlier whaling period are largely confined to pie crimpers, called jagging wheels, canes, and similar "useful articles." Later, as the Quaker influence dwindled, the faces of beautiful women copied from Godey woodcuts were etched on teeth. Many carvings were crude, others indicated rare craftsmanship. Canes were wrought either from the whale's jaw or perhaps from the vertebrae of several species of sharks, and as the art of scrimshawing broadened it included cribbage boards made from walrus tusks, inlaid with colorful tropical woods and mother-of-pearl.

"Scrimshawing" became a term generally recognized as applying to almost any novelty a sailor might make at sea and bring back for relatives and friends at home as a souvenir of the cruise. It is a safe assertion that few homes in New Bedford, Nantucket, Provincetown or other whaling ports were without two or three jagging wheels and etched teeth in the days when whaling was at its peak. Scrimshawing was so closely identified with whaling voyages that the average whaleman considered it as essential in attesting his prowess on the voyage as was the scalp lock at the belt of an Indian brave returning from a foray. This folk art devised by whalemen has been called the only art indigenous to America.

Occasionally ships met at sea and captains exchanged visits, known as "gams." These were usually an occasion for an extra portion of grog all around and gossip swapping among members of the crews.

Whalers' chanteys or "shanties" were popular when the whaler was lucky enough to possess a natural song leader with a talent for improvising racy verses. Though most tales of ocean whaling stress the chanteys, they were never really as much a part of the life on the whalers as of that on the merchantmen.

When they were sung it was on the long haul back to the ship, to lighten the back-breaking toil of towing a dead whale's bulky carcass, or while manning the capstan. Most of them were the inspiration of the ship's song leader. Neptune was no censor and the robust wit of these improvisations (sung only out of hearing of the "old man") had its chief sources in lively libels on the master's ancestry or the popularity of this or that girl at the last port visited. Ribald profanity spiced the hearty dish to a whaleman's none too delicate taste.

A. Howard Clark, in "The Whale Fishery" (Miscellaneous Documents of the Senate of the United States, 1881-1882), recalls that on his first whaling voyage there was an elderly colored cook known as "Doctor." When the cutting-in dragged, Mr. Clark writes, the captain would call out, "Come on Doctor, wake 'em up!"

Whereupon "Doctor" in a rich baritone would start off, the crew coming in on the refrain:

(Doctor)—A dandy ship and a dandy crew,
(Crew)— Hi ho, my dandy, Oh!
A dandy mate and skipper, too,
Hi ho, my dandy, Oh!
Oh, what shall I do for my dandy crew?
Hi ho, my dandy, Oh!
I'll give them wine and brandy, too.
Hi ho, my dandy, Oh!

And so on with endless variations.

Mr. Clark credits to Capt. Amos C. Baker of Clark's Point light (now Butler's Flat light in New Bedford harbor) the following innocuous ditty sung by whalemen homeward bound:

I thought I heard our captain say:
Good-bye, fare you well; good-bye, fare you well;
That to-morrow is our sailing day;
Hurrah, my boys, we're homeward bound!

We're homeward bound to New Bedford Town;
Good-bye, fare you well; good-bye, fare you well;
When we get there we will walk around;
Hurrah, my boys, we're homeward bound!

And now our ship is full, my boys;
Good-bye, fare you well; good-bye, fare you well;
We'll think of home and all its joys;
Hurrah, my boys, we're homeward bound!

It's when you see those New Bedford girls;
Good-bye, fare you well; good-bye, fare you well;
With their bright blue eyes and flowing curls;
Hurrah, my boys, we're homeward bound!

When we are paid off, we'll have a good time;
Good-bye, fare you well; good-bye, fare you well;
The sparking of girls and the drinking of wine;
Hurrah, my boys, we're homeward bound!

We'll spend our money free when we're on shore;
Good-bye, fare you well; good-bye, fare you well;
And when it's all gone we'll to sea for more;
Hurrah, my boys, we're homeward bound!

But for the most part such a chantey as the above would be as popular with the crew of a whaling ship as "Rock-a-Bye, Baby" would be in a lumber camp.

Complaints about the food served on whaling vessels were frequent and unavoidable. With absolutely no means of preserving food other than heavy brine, used for beef and pork, diet had to be monotonous. In tropical climates hard tack, flour, and other edibles became wormy.

When blubber was tried out, crisp bits like "cracklings" remained. They were known as "scraps" and chiefly were used as fuel for the fire under the trying kettles. Some of them, however, went to feed the hard-working whalemen. Those who have eaten these bits claim that they tasted like pieces of fat pork fried a crisp golden brown. And, too, near the end of the try-out, cooks on shipboard often produced a batch of doughnuts which were fried in the seething whale fat. Those who have tried them say they were good.

One of the staples was known as duff. This was a mixture of flour, lard, and yeast boiled in a bag in equal parts of fresh and salt water until it was quite hard, like an old-fashioned plum pudding. Sometimes fat salt pork chopped fine was added as shortening. Duff was usually served with molasses.

Another staple was hardtack, an unleavened biscuit which constituted an important part of a whaleman's fare. It was somewhat after the style of a pilot cracker — only coarser.

Salt horse was the name by which was known the corned beef which formed the principal meat diet on whale ships. Probably in rare instances it actually was salted horse meat.

A great delicacy was known as lobscouse — hard bread and salt meat well sprinkled with pepper, chopped into pieces and boiled in water.

Small as was the pay given the common seamen, the trips were frequently financially disastrous to the owners. On the other hand the percentage of profit from successful voyages was tremendous. Such trips were called "greasy voyages." One that cleared expenses, but left little profit, was known as a "saving voyage."

Few vessels during their active whaling careers had voyages as uniformly "greasy" as the Lagoda. This ship, operated by the Bourne interests and now reproduced one-half scale in the Old Dartmouth Historical Museum at New Bedford, on its best voyage returned a net profit of 363.5 percent to its owners. The lowest percentage of profit this vessel made between the years 1841 and 1860 was 29.6. The Lagoda's average profit per voyage during that period was 98 percent.

Many men, however, passed a life time at sea, invested their own savings as well as those of their family and friends, only to meet with disaster. Few industries have ever been such a gamble between enormous profits and financial ruin.

The whalemen were paid in shares or "lays," an average basis being as follows: Captain, 1/8th to 1/15th; first mate, usually about 1/18th; second mate, 1/28th; third mate, 1/36th; fourth mate, 1/60th; cooper, 1/60th; boatsteerers, 1/80th; steward, 1/90th; cook, 1/110th; seamen, 1/150th; green hands, 1/175th. This meant that at the end of the voyage, the gross proceeds were divided according to the above percentages: 1/12th lay meaning one barrel out of every 12; a 1/150th lay, one barrel out of every 150.

Seamen received an advance against their share, at the start of the voyage, in the form of an outfit of sea-clothes for which a charge of $70 was usual. The actual value of the outfit seldom exceeded $25, but the men were charged interest on this $70, plus the $10 commission paid the land "shark," an agent who beguiled them into signing up for the voyage, plus charges for extra clothes at top prices. This usually ran a seaman's initial indebtedness up to something like $125. The sum of $225 was an average lay for an ordinary seaman after a successful two-year voyage. Deducting the $125 indebtedness from their proceeds, this left the "greenie" with $100 for his two years' toil if the voyage was a success. If it was not, he found himself in debt. And the chances were that within 48 hours after he landed, whatever money he had would be squandered in the grog shops and brothels to which he would be enticed by a "shark."

Many are the almost unbelievable tales told of hardships experienced by Arctic whalers. There is the instance in which the crew of one vessel encountering another in the ice-fields was amazed to see that no helmsman stood at the wheel of the listless vessel. A hail brought no response. A boat crew sent out to investigate found the master of the ship, his wife, and the whole crew frozen stiff and stark, several of them apparently while engaged in customary tasks.

On another occasion when the ice floes closed in and imprisoned a number of ships, a member of the crew of one of them, Capt. George Fred Tilton of Chilmark, Martha's Vineyard, volunteered to walk over the ice and barren wastes to procure assistance from the United States revenue service. Accompanied by an Eskimo and his squaw he made the perilous trip of 2,400 miles in safety and brought back help in time.

In 1871 a fleet of 32 vessels entered the Arctic for a summer of fishing. Most of them were from New Bedford. Although the Eskimos warned them of an early winter, a plentiful supply of whales caused the masters to tarry. There was a shift in the wind, the ice pans started their relentless grinding, and only one of the vessels escaped. Thirty-one were either frozen in or crushed, lost forever in the Arctic wastes. Their officers and crews, including the wives and children of some of the captains, 1,206 souls in all, took to the whaleboats. They made a journey of 80 miles through an Arctic gale, were taken aboard seven more fortunate vessels that were free of the grinding ice, and reached Honolulu or San Francisco without loss of a single life. Twenty-two of the lost whaleships belonged to New Bedford, and with their outfits and cargoes were valued at a million and a half dollars. In 1876 the city sustained another severe loss when 12 vessels had to be abandoned in the ice.

"THAR SHE BLOWS!"

There are forty or more varieties of the whale, some little sought because of the inferior quality or scant quantity of the oil produced. Whalemen, especially after they took to the high seas, usually confined their efforts to the pursuit of three species — sperm, right, and bowhead whales.

The sperm whale, properly known as the cachalot, has a blunt nose with only one nostril or "blow-hole" and a sharp lower jaw suited to its mode of feeding. This jaw, studded with vicious teeth, permits the sperm whale to tear giant squid and cuttlefish, its favorite food, from their haunts in rocky caves and ledges. Cachalots were usually found in temperate or tropical waters. Sperm oil made the best of illuminants known at the time, and from this whale's "case" (the upper portion of its head) was bailed the valuable spermaceti used in the manufacture of high grade candles.

The right and bowhead whales are similar species with twin nostrils and mammoth jaws. They both feed on small marine life, crustaceans and fish seldom larger than sardines. In feeding the great jaws are extended and the whale races through a school of feed. Then the jaws close on a maw-full of water and live nourishment. The water is expelled through a screen of coarse hair which fringes the whalebone that rims its mouth, and the fish go in the other direction.

The outstanding differences between the right whale and the bowhead are that the bowhead is seldom found outside the Arctic circle and has a thicker protective coating of blubber against the cold. The bowhead therefore yields more oil. It also has longer and more valuable bone in the mouth.

Besides differing from other species of whales by its tooth-studded lower jaw, the sperm whale could be distinguished at a distance by its single spout. Arising from the depths where it held its breath, the whale on coming to the surface always "blew" or expelled the breath that had been held while below water. This expulsion of warm breath into a cooler atmosphere created a vapor visible for a long distance to the men on lookout, and resulted in the nerve-quickening cry of "Blow-o-ws—thar she blows!" A single slanting forward vent of vapor indicated to the man at the masthead a sperm whale; a double vent, a right or a bowhead.

Though sperm whaling was by far the most profitable of any, it entailed the greatest hazard. The sperm whale, or "sparm" as it was called by the true whalemen, was a fighter by instinct. While the bowhead and right whales had a powerful weapon in their tails or flukes, the sperm whale had not only its flukes but a massive jaw, the lower part of which was armed with teeth, a single tooth sometimes weighing as much as four pounds. Either the flukes or the jaw could and did, time and time again, flay or crunch into tiny bits the small boats in which the whalemen went out from the ship.

Logbooks of many a whaler that followed the warmer ocean currents where the sperm whales were to be found contain numerous records attesting to the temper and tremendous strength of angered bull whales. Not only were small boats smashed to bits, but several instances are recorded in which the ship was attacked and sunk by an infuriated sperm. The last instance of this kind was of comparatively recent date, when the bark Kathleen of New Bedford was sunk by a sperm whale in March 1902.

At the cry from masthead, "Thar she blows!" the captain of the ship would inquire, "Where away?" and the lookout would reply, giving the position. Going aloft, the captain studied the prospect of getting the whale or whales, and if he thought the chances good, he ordered the boats lowered.

The officer and boatsteerer of each boat saw to it that irons and lances were in place, that the tubs containing the heavy manila rope were in order.

At the order, "Lower away," the chase began. Sometimes the prey would be four or five miles from the ship. With a fair wind sail was hoisted and the boats sailed down to the whales. Otherwise the muscles of five pairs of shoulders bowed to long ash sweeps.

There were always six whalemen to a boat. No high velocity rifles — they were armed with crude iron spears or harpoons.

Sperm whales were especially wary and possessed a keen sense of hearing. Usually when a short distance away the men would take in the oars and substitute paddles as quieter than the heavy sweeps.

An interesting peculiarity of the whale was in its ratio of submersion and surface periods and its activity while under the surface. If a whale remained above the surface for 20 minutes after "blowing," whalemen figured it would remain submerged for the same length of time. And an old whaleman could usually tell almost the identical spot where the whale would reappear. Whether feeding or migrating, the giant mammals apparently never changed their course after submerging. A small boat from the ship might be almost up to a whale when it sounded. By figuring the underwater speed and time below, the boatsteerer or mate could usually have his craft almost on the spot where the leviathan again came to the surface.

Close to the huge bulk lying half awash, the officer would give the order, "Stand up." The boatsteerer stood and wedged his left knee in the "clumsy cleat," a brace, and putting his right foot back on the first thwart, he seized the "iron," or harpoon, as the landsman calls it. At the command of the officer, "Give it to him!" the iron was hurled into the whale. If successful, the boatsteerer reported to the officer, "All fast." The line ran out at a terrific rate as the wounded whale attempted to escape.

Many harpooned whales would start off at a rapid pace on the surface, towing the whaleboat behind on what was termed a "Nantucket sleigh ride."

Sometimes the whale would "sound," or plunge downward at the thrust of the sharp iron. On occasions, in deep water, it was necessary to throw over the end of the line, to which would be attached a heavy oak bucket that acted as a drag. If the line fouled it was necessary to cut it and let the whale go free, otherwise the men might be killed, or the boat might capsize or be taken down.

Occasionally more than one iron would be sunk into the blubber, for a single harpoon would frequently draw. When the boatsteerer's report, "All fast," signalled that the iron or harpoon had been hurled into the whale, then he and the officer would change places, the boatsteerer taking his place at the stern with the large sweep used as a tiller. The officer in the bow stood ready for the kill.

In later whaling a shoulder gun was used to shoot an explosive bomb into the whale. Later still a swivel gun for the same purpose was mounted at one end of the boat. But in the days of Moby Dick it was a razor-edged lance which found the vital spot of the exhausted prey. The great creature lashed and churned the sea in its death-agony or "flurry." Then came a spout tinged with blood, known as the "red flag"; the whole sea was reddened; the end was near. Then the creature rolled over on its side and lay awash. Its fin stuck out of the water. "Fin out!" was the cry of triumph. The terrific combat was over. If the whale was one of several, a "waif" — a piece of cloth fastened to a stick—was stuck in his carcass so that he could be found again and taken in tow.

The actual capture of a whale, the thrust of the harpoon, the "Nantucket sleigh ride," the alertness necessary to escape disaster during the whale's flurry after the fatal thrust of the lance, were really the only glamorous features of whaling. The towing back to the ship of the ponderous carcass, the cutting-in and trying out, were seemingly endless drudgery of backbreaking, dirty toil. Dangling "blanket pieces" of blubber swaying with each lurch of the vessel, decks treacherously slippery from oil and gurry, combined to constitute a less spectacular but no less actual danger than the chase.

Although the technique differed slightly with the species of whale, a general description of the method employed in trying out the blubber will make this process understandable. When the cry "Fin out!" announced that the whale had turned on its side in death, the long pull back to the ship began. Sometimes a favorable wind allowed the whaler to sail toward the small boat, but often a distance of from four to eight miles had to be covered by the oarsmen, dragging in their wake many tons of dead whale barely awash.

Reaching the ship, the carcass was made fast to the starboard side. The "cutting stage" was lowered and a blubber hook inserted between the eye and the fin. From the cutting stage a mate with a razor-edged spade freed the blubber from the flesh. The falls were tightened and the "blanket piece," unwinding spirally, like the skin from an orange, was hoisted up to the mast head, then lowered into the hold, where in the blubber room it was cut into "horse pieces," or chunks about one foot wide and two feet long. These horse pieces were pitched up on deck and sliced with a mincing knife that produced the so-called "bible leaves," small slices of blubber resembling thick book pages attached to a thin binding.

Erected forward on the deck was the try works, a fireplace built of brick and containing two large iron pots. Into the latter the "bible leaves" were pitched, and when the blazing fire had boiled them free of oil, the "scraps," as they were called, became in turn fuel to feed the flames for trying out more blubber. At night scraps were placed in a hoop iron basket and burned to supply illumination.

The size of a whale generally, though not invariably, indicated the number of barrels of oil it would yield. In colder water, nature provides a thicker blubber — hence more oil.

"They've struck gold!" This blood-stirring cry in a mining camp might be compared with the announcement that a returning whale ship had ambergris on board. And with good reason! Worth in many instances, depending upon its purity, more than its actual weight in gold, one of those rare finds of precious offal often increased the value of the ship's cargo several fold.

Ambergris is a putty-like, partially digested substance that has apparently failed to set well on the whale's stomach. It has been found floating on the sea. At other times large pieces have been found in the intestines of the mammal.

As far as is known, ambergris is the result of an indisposition to which only sperm whales are known to be susceptible. The pulpy grayish mass is usually mixed with the indigestible bills of the squid or cuttlefish, a favorite diet of the sperm whale, so that ambergris may be merely the result of the whale's dining not wisely, but too well.

As early as 1840 the value of ambergris as a base for fine perfumes was known. Its heavy musky odor that clings despite all efforts to eliminate it made it a most valuable vehicle to carry and retain the precious essences distilled by the perfumers.

The first record of ambergris being included in the catch of a whaler was the instance in 1841 when the brig America of Wareham returned with 18 pounds of it. There is a lapse of 17 years before another catch is recorded. In 1858 the schooner Watchman, of Nantucket, collected 800 pounds of the valuable substance.

The largest find of ambergris ever reported fell to the owners and crew of the New Zealand ship Splendid, which found 983 pounds in 1883. This ship was commanded by Capt. James A. M. Earle, who later skippered the Charles W. Morgan, of New Bedford, the historic bark now enshrined at the estate of the late Col. Edward H. R. Green. The Morgan returned from a voyage in 1913 with 11 pounds of ambergris, and there were many finds by other ships of from 50 to 100 pounds.

Large hauls of this strange intestinal secretion did not bring in proportion what the smaller ones did. Announcement of the discovery of a sizable piece of ambergris had the natural tendency to knock values down. Agents, owners, and ships' captains were unable to keep their good luck secret and dispose of the ambergris in small quantities because the crew usually had a hand in the discovery and were clamoring for their share.

FIN OUT — BUT NOT FINIS

The years from 1859 to 1872 saw the decline of the whaling industry due to three distinct causes — the discovery of petroleum oil, war between the North and South, and the tremendous toll of men and ships exacted by the shifting ice fields of the Arctic.

In 1861 came the Civil War. During the raids of the Confederate men-of-war Alabama and Shenandoah, 34 whaling vessels were either burned or captured. The Union Government purchased 40 more which constituted the so-called Stone Fleet. These vessels were loaded with field stone and granite, then were sailed south and scuttled in Confederate harbor entrances in an effort to create a blockade.

The war thus destroyed in all 74 vessels — a tremendous loss. The ice fields of the Arctic took further toll from the diminished fleet.

But the industry still fought hard for life. For several years whalers made their trips to the Arctic and returned with "greasy voyages." There was still a sale, though a diminishing one, for oil and whalebone. Most of the New Bedford whaling interests fitted out steam whalers which were able to get through narrow channels in the ice, regardless of wind and weather.

But as petroleum began to be produced in increasing quantities and at a decreasing price, and as steel makers began to offer paper-thin blades of that material for milady's "stays," a once mighty industry along the Atlantic coast became but an exciting memory perpetuated in a few musty and precious relics, a few thrilling pages of printed story, a few dramatic reels of film. The days when men went down to the sea in whale ships to seek their daily bread through personal skill and daring gave place to other days and other manners of toil and reward.

The whaling industry survives, revived in recent years, but the men and the methods both have changed. By 1910 Norwegians were virtually in control of whaling, which is still practiced commercially off the coasts of lower California and Mexico and in the Southern Pacific — and indeed in the Antarctic Ocean, off Japan, off the western coast of Africa and along the New Zealand coast as well.

In 1937 the United States entered into a treaty with other principal maritime nations whereby the taking of whales is so regulated as to permit continuance of the industry through conservation of its quarry. Japan declined to participate in this treaty, despite the warning of the treaty conference to all interested nations that unless the industry is now strictly regulated it must soon cease to be remunerative.

Whaling in the 20th century is an efficient, mechanized process. On the Pacific coast the smaller steamers hunt as single units towing their catch to a shore station at the close of each day. Most of the Norwegian whaling interests, however, operate through a fleet, headed by a large "mother" ship or factory ship equipped to draw the whale into its interior. Today a vessel as large as a sea-going tug — one unit of the fleet — approaches the whale. From the bow of this powerful craft a small cannon roars. An explosive harpoon attached to a heavy manilla rope hurtles over the water and sinks deep into the whale. Sulphur bottom and fin back whales, a species scorned by the old-time whalers because of the thinness of the blubber and the habit of sinking when killed, now constitute the greater part of the catch, and compressed air is pumped into the carcass until it floats like a balloon.

The catch, thus artificially rendered buoyant, is towed to the floating factory, and drawn up through an opening in the stern on an incline directly into the cutting room. Modern science salvages every ounce of the oil, and every by-product is turned to commercial account. The oil is used chiefly in the manufacture of soap and paint, but also for burning, for batching jute, for quenching steel plates, for dressing leather, and in lubricants for screw-cutting machines. The flesh is made into guano and the bones are ground into fertilizer. Even the water in which the blubber has been "tried out" goes into the making of glue. Whale meat is sold as an edible in several countries and is sometimes canned. Old American whalemen spoke of trying it occasionally but much preferred their "salt horse."

Whaling as the Yankee whalemen practiced it is gone forever. For that perilous, courageous sea-faring, as grim in actuality as it is glamorous in retrospect — "fin out!" But to the mighty industry of the deep oceans no finis has yet been written.

GLOSSARY OF WHALING TERMS

Bible leaves: Small slices of blubber cut from a horse piece and placed in a try pot.

Blanket pieces: A long curling strip of blubber spaded from the whale's carcass like peel from an orange or apple.

Boatsteerer: One of the most skilful of the ship's crew. The man who threw the "iron" and steered the small boat in for the kill.

Breaching: About to dive, the whale frequently shot out of the water nearly full length, diving head first beneath the surface.

Brit: Minute animalculae which formed the bulk of right and bowhead whales' food.

Case: The upper portion of the sperm whale's head, from which valuable spermaceti was bailed and used in the manufacture of high-grade candles.

Chantey men: Old-timers who knew the sea songs and led the rhythmic singing when the crew hove at windlass or towed the dead whale back to ship.

Chanteys: Songs with a singsong tempo; quite often profane and obscene. Each hauling operation whether at windlass, mainsail, or with oars, had its own particular chantey.

Clumsy cleat: A knee brace used by the boatsteerer when he thrust his iron.

Fin out: When the whale after being lanced dies and turns on side, his fin comes out above the water.

Flukes: The tail of a whale.

Flurry: The spasmodic churning of a dying whale.

Greasy voyage: A trip marked by a successful return with a large cargo of oil.

Greenie: One making his first whaling voyage.

Horse pieces: Pieces of blubber about 12″ x 24″ for mincing, before going into the try pot.

Iron: The harpoon used by the boatsteerer. There were several types, all of which had their champions.

Jagging wheel: One of the most popular of the scrimshaw products. A wheel with geared edge designed to be used for crimping or binding the edges of pies.

Lay: That percentage of a ship's earnings to which each officer and crew member was entitled. A captain's lay might be from 1/8 to 1/15th, or one barrel out of every 15, of a catch netting $35,000, or $2,333. A common sailor would probably receive a 1/150th lay or $233.

Lob tailing: An apparently sportive practice of young sperm whales, swimming along the surface head submerged and tail only out of water and striking the water with their powerful flukes, producing a smack that could be heard for miles.

Land shark: Shore agent who procured greenhorn whalemen and outfitted them. Their methods were utterly unscrupulous.

Lobscouse: A delicacy — hard bread and salt meat well sprinkled with pepper, chopped into pieces and boiled in water.

Log: The logbook, journal or diary in which were recorded the ship's daily position, the weather, activities of the crew, etc.

Moby Dick: Made famous in a story by Herman Melville, who once sailed on a New Bedford whaler. It was the name given to a legendary white whale of great size and courage.

Nantucket sleigh-ride: The towing of a whaleboat by a runaway whale, manila rope from the harpoon being attached to the boat.

Pod: A school or group of sperm whales.

Red flag: The red flag indicated a mortal wound and was hailed with joy. The vapor-like breath was tinged with the blood of the fighting mammal when in its final gasps.

Saving voyage: A whaling trip that barely cleared expenses.

Scraps: Small pieces of blubber from which the oil had been extracted, used to feed the fire under the try pot, sometimes eaten, and often burned in a wire basket for illumination.

Scrimshaw: Spare time diversion of whalemen, generally accepted as covering the fashioning and decorating of articles from teeth of the sperm whale.

Shanghai: To drug or stupefy a man with liquor and then carry him to sea as a crew member against his will. Probably more frequent in fiction than in actual practice, although many greenies were unquestionably initiated into whaling by this method.

Shoulder gun: A heavy brass gun lifted to the shoulder and used to shoot an explosive bomb into a whale. (Used in the later days of whaling.)

Sound: A whale's dive beneath the surface for feeding or in an effort to escape the harpoon.

Spermaceti: A fat, semi-solid substance in the case, upper portion of a sperm whale's head. Bailed or scooped out. At one time in great demand for the manufacture of high grade candles and ointment.

Swivel gun: A similar instrument to the shoulder gun, except that it was mounted at one end of a whale boat. (The most recent method of whale killing.)

Thar she blows: The cry of the lookout at the masthead, signifying that a whale had come to the surface to refill its lungs with fresh air. The expulsion caused a vapor, or spout. The announcement was followed by the lowering of the boats.

Waif: A small flag or piece of cloth attached to a sharp stick. After the kill, if another whale lured the boat crew away, the waif was sunk into the blubber to identify ownership and to locate the catch later.

A FEW BOOKS ABOUT WHALING

This brief introduction to the history of whaling was condensed from information supplied by William H. Tripp, curator and secretary of the Old Dartmouth Historical Society of New Bedford, supplemented by records and documents at the Old Dartmouth Historical Society rooms and the New Bedford Public Library.

DIRECTORY OF WHALING MASTERS

In the early days of whaling such an entry as "Captain Abbott of the Ship S. R. Soper" was considered sufficient identification and few given names were recorded. Even United States Customs records contain, in most instances, only the master's surname. Research through age-yellowed newspaper files and musty log books by Federal Writers' Project workers provided most of the given names included in this listing.

Few of the men who sailed or fitted out whale ships were scholars. Hence the spelling of ships' names often differs. As different ship painters laboriously blocked out the vessel's name on the stern, it frequently changed from Phoenix to "Phenix" or "Pheonix"; from Pocohontas to "Pocahontas"; or Antarctic to "Antartic". These omissions or transpositions of a letter or two were generally entered on the U. S. Customs records so that some whaling ships officially sailed under three differently spelled names during their career.

*Indicates killed at sea by a whale.

Indicates died at sea.

Indicates transferred from command because of illness or assignment to another ship.

*Indicates actual sailing date not certain, but between Aug. 1775 and February 1776.

REPLACEMENTS

Many men sailed from the original port as mates or even boat steerers and returned as masters of their ships. Death of the starting captain, in combat with a whale or perhaps from the spears or arrows of savages; occasionally as a result of bloody mutiny aboard ship, or from natural causes, brought about these changes in many instances. Frequently however, whaling masters touching at a civilized island would find orders waiting them to take command of another ship and this, of course, resulted in the elevation of the officers who sailed with them.

These replacements, with the terse explanation carried on the log, follow:
